SOFTBALL

One of the best softball games played in the Quinte League this summer was staged at Riverdale Park on Thursday evening, when the Deseronto Pohies defeated the Napanee Leafs by the score of 16-12.

Not in the history of softball in this town has there been such spectacular fielding as was shown on this game, many of the catches being picked up inches from the ground. The last catch in the game was that by Dorothy Richardson, the local stellar right fielder, made an almost impossible line drive catch.

The pitching on both sides was also superb, Mary Bates, the Napanee twirler, having a shade the better of the argument. Miss Bates pitched a very swift ball and had excellent control, fanning several of the visitors. Both teams were about evenly matched and the fans certainly enjoyed the game to the very last.

The attendance was extremely large, many accompanying the team from Deseronto. There has always been a keen rivalry between Deseronto and Napanee in all kinds of sport and the rooters of both teams had a merry time of it on Thursday evening.

In an exhibition game of softball played on Friday evening, the Kingston Supremes defeated the Napanee Leafs by the score of 17-12. The game was scheduled for 6.30 at Riverdale Park, but it was fully 9 minutes late in starting started owing to the non-arrival of the visiting team. Two innings were played, the home team leading at the time, when a downpour of rain drove the players to shelter. The teams and fans then went to the visitors, where the remaining seven innings were played. This was the second time these teams have met this summer, the local girls winning the first game.

HUFF FAMILY RE-UNION

TO THE EDITOR:

Sir,—This will probably end our trespass on your so freely granted space in issue of call to all and every member of this so widely scattered circle of blood kinship, to spend two days together at Picton and Adolphustown, to commemorate the memory of our ancestors, Paul and Solomon Huff.

There will be representatives at Picton business meeting on Aug. 25th, from many lands: far away Australia, extreme distances of the United States, the vast expanses of Canada, and possibly England and other countries, and we want the local residents to turn out in full force to greet them in beedming manner, as becometh clansmen of one blood.

The 26th of August will be devoted to anniversary services at the old meeting house at Hay Bay, where we hope to be joined by the U. E. Loyalist stock generally, and to whom a cordial invitation is extended to assist in rendering homage due to those self-sacrificing pioneers, noble men and more noble women, who there laid the foundation on which our national structure of civil and religious liberty today rests.

After the disposal of business pertaining to the Association on 25th at Picton, all meetings will be open to the public, and provision has been made for feeding everybody at the Hay Bay gathering, where the programme of speeches will afford profit as well as entertainment. We are hopeful of meeting a vast congregation around this grand old relic of Methodism.

BUSHNELL WILL OPPOSE EDWARDS.

A.

At a convention of Frontenac-Addington Progressives in Kingston on Saturday last, R. J. Bushnell, of Bath, market gardener, was chosen as the candidate in the coming Federal election.

Only two names were submitted, the other nominee being G. E. Ainsworth, of Newburgh, brother of Sir Allan Aylesworth, of Toronto.

A resolution was adopted at the convention, expressing gratification with the way in which Robert Forke, Progressive leader, has handled the party in the House of Commons, especially during the last session and predicting that the time would come when Progressives would not only hold the balance of power, as they had in the past, but would have control of power with Mr. Forke as Premier.

Frontenac-Addington constituency was represented in the last Parliament by Hon. J. W. Edwards, Conservative, who defeated W. S. Reed, the Progressive candidate.

PARTRIDGE POLITICS

BY R. J. DEACHMAN

Out in the scattered bush of the Gatineau Hills I tramped a few weeks ago with a college friend. Suddenly there started almost from beneath our feet a wood partridge. It fluttered a while with broken wing and wounded cry. My friend knew much of the ways of the wild. "Stop," said he, "it should run about 15 or 20 feet from it's nest without a sound, then do that injured stunt. By circling close and paying no attention to the bird we may find the nest." We did find it, after nearly 20 minutes search, by following my broken wing I will show you a dirty scandal." Instinct teaches the partridge—reason tells Mr. Meighen that to get people away from something worth while, you must start a counter attraction—an imitation of a broken wing—a wild cry of scandal—a whispered story of hidden things too horrible to tell. These are the arts of the wild—these the tricks of Mr. Meighen.

THROUGH ERROR TO TRIUMPH

The facts are clear. They can be stated briefly. For four long years the country marched through blood and suffering, a virtual via dolorosa, through anguish and tears and waste of treasure, to final victory in the great war. No other country in the world of equal population had ever equipped and maintained and kept so long in the field so great an army. Then followed the hectic post war boom and after that collapse—That collapse of trade—the decline of purchasing power, was world wide. In Canada of course during the Tory regime. That was no fault of theirs—no political power on earth could have prevented it completely—a measure of decline in business was inevitable. Canada was saved from deeper loss, from years of other depths of depression by what must after all be regarded not as a matter of calculated foresight but as the result of adventitious circumstances. What were those circumstances?

THE LUCKY ACCIDENT.

The Tories were in power after the war? They were defeated in 1921, not because they were particularly responsible for the decline of business, but because Canada was tired of the arbitrary acts of Meighen and his associates and because they were ready to give any government in power its emergency chance for the delight of trying something else. Rarely have the political facts been more beneficent. The collapse of business came about because agricultural prices declined more rapidly than the price of the prices of other commodities—the result you can see at a glance—purchasing power of the agricultural population of Canada died over night—it was gone—Business stopped. If you doubt these conditions read the mournful tale of the last Tory budget delivered by Mr. Drayton in 1921.

(1) Canada currency far below par. (2) A railway burden of nearly $50,000,000 a year. (3) Deficits amounting upward of $80,000,000 a year. (4) Trade declining—a heavy adverse balance with the world, especially with the U.S. (5) Taxation increasing.

A NEW ORIENTATION.

Face now the new facts.-Read the answers to the situation of 1921 in terms of 1926.

(1) As I write these words Canada's currency has the highest value of any currency of any nation, except that of Great Britain. Only three countries record currency above the American par—Canada, Holland and Switzerland—neither of the latter were in the war.

(2) Railway deficits disappearing and this year barring unforseen incident, Canada's great railway system will pay operating expenses and pay every dollar of interest owing to the public. More important even than that is the fact it is performing satisfactorily it's true function of a great transportation system.

(3) The debt is now sharply declining, this year's decrease totalling over $22,000,000 with prospects of further reduction despite declining tax rate.

(4) Trade is buoyant, never more so—our favorable trade balance now is larger than the trade balance of the U. S.: we have the largest per capita trade balance of any country in the world. We are told that this is due to increase in export of agricultural products. I propose now to make two or three astounding statements regarding Canadian trade. They should ring throughout the country in this campaign —they should give the emphatic denial to all this talk of export of raw material and all the other pessimistic nonsense, which issues from the Tory campaign headquarters.

(a) If you forgot entirely to include in the Canadian exports for the year ending March 31st, 1926, our exports of all grains, wheat, oats, buckwheat, barley and all other grains, even then our balance of trade, while slightly adverse, would be $14,000,000 better than it was in 1921.

(b) Further if you eliminated from the list all our exports of pulp, pulpwood asbestos, nickle and wheat—our adverse balance of trade even then would be only slightly greater than it was in 1921. Does that give the lie to Tory stories about this country selling its birth right and disposing of its raw material.

(5) Since that time there have been sharp cuts in taxation.

(a) Reduction in income tax.

(b) Reduction in sales tax.

(c) Lowering of tariff on agricultural implements, motor cars, lighting plants, saw millingmachinery, well drilling machine.

(d) Restoration of penny postage.

(e) Abolition of receipt tax.

These things stand out, like the sun at noon day—they are unavoidable—they are a relief in every persons pocket. Is it any wonder we have partridge politics from Mr. Meighen? Is it surprising that he cries, "don't look that way, follow me, I am the bird with the broken pinion, hear me scream—about the scandal bugs."

NO LIGHT THERE.

But the question is asked, could not Meighen if he had been in power accomplished these things? I face that question fairly, I give you the unqualified answer, No. The reason is clear—follow a little further.

Mr. Meighen is an advocate of high tariffs. If he believes in anything he believes in higher tariff. It is the tariff raises the price of manufactured goods—it cannot materially raise the price of farm products. The collapse of 1921 came from the fact that farm prices went down while other commodities stayed up or came down more slowly. Meighen's policy would only have accentuated that condition. (c) There was a world wide increase in tariffs. The Tories say tariffs went up in 82 countries. I defy any man to name one of the 82 where recovery from depression was so rapid or complete as in Canada. Our agricultural position once more approximately normal while the ablest statesmanship of the U.S. is floundering on the problem and over there farm bankruptcies are five times higher than they were in 1920. We were fortunate in having Liberal guidance during the trying period. It was one of the lucky events in Canadian history. It was a fortuitous incident—it was not prescience that guided us to safe haven. But the case is now clearly before the Canadian people—a backward step would be folly. Stop, look, listen, and Hindu-like—there in the nest of prosperity is in sight —don't be drawn away from it by that rare deal by the distress signals of Mr. Meighen, who asks you to look for things where they are not. It's partridge politics—it seeks to draw you away from realities—only by that means, by deceiving the Canadian people, can Mr. Meighen hope to return to office.

CONGRATULATIONS

Prince Albert, Aug. 5, 1926.

MR. H. H. HORSEY,
Cressy.

Please accept and convey to the Liberals of Prince Edward-Lennox my hearty congratulations upon your nomination as Liberal candidate for Prince Edward-Lennox in the present campaign and also my best wishes for every success.

W. L. MACKENZIE KING.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

BY REV. C. G. TRUMBULL.
(Editor of The Sunday School Times).

JETHRO'S WISE COUNSEL.

Sunday, Aug. 15—Exodus 18 : 1-27.

Golden Text—To every man his work (Mark 13 : 34).

Was it wise counsel, this advice given by Jethro to Moses? Who was Jethro? Who was Moses? Under what circumstances was the counsel given? We can readily find the answers to these questions, and come to our own conclusions.

Let us begin with Moses. God had saved his life as a baby, given him a remarkable training for 40 years, then had set him aside for 40 years more in the discipline of quiet, as a shepherd, and then had called and commissioned him to be the deliverer and law-giver for God's Chosen People, Israel. God had revealed Himself and His ways and will to Moses as to no one in the history of the world, before or since. "He made known His ways unto Moses" (Psa. 103 : 7). "And there arose not as a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses, whom the Lord knew face to face" (Deut. 34 : 10)—except the Lord Jesus Christ Himself; for He was called a prophet like unto Moses (Deut. 18 : 15; Acts 3 : 22 ; 7 : 37). God told Moses just what to do for Israel, step by step, while He was bringing them out of Egypt's bondage, and during all the journeyings in the wilderness. And God did this by His own direct words to Moses, not through the medium of any other human beings for "the Lord spoke to Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend" (Exod. 33 : 11).

Who was Jethro? He was "the priest of Midian." Moses had first met him 40 years before, when Moses had fled from Egypt into the land of Midian, far to the southeast of the Peninsula of Sinai. Moses had married one of his daughters, Zipporah, at that time; very little is recorded of her, except her rebellious protest against a command of the Lord (Exod. 4 : 25, 26), and the fact that Moses had sent her back to her father when he led the children of Israel out of Egypt (Exod. 18 : 2). Midian was an idolatrous people, who brought sin and death into Israel later, and whom the Lord commanded Israel to smite (Num. 25) ; Midian had joined Moab against Israel (Num. 22 : 4), and later, at God's command, Israel almost exterminated the Midianites (Num 31).

Now, Jethro, as the priest of Midian, was the official representative of a false, idolatrous religion. He heard of all that God had done for Moses, and for Israel, his people, and that the Lord had brought Israel out of Egypt." So he came to visit Moses and Israel in the wilderness. The story of the meeting is given in this lesson. After hearing of the wonderful things God had done, Jethro rejoiced, blessed the Lord, recognized "that the Lord is greater than all gods," and "took a burnt offering and sacrifices for God."

Then Jethro proceeded to give his son-in-law some advice. He saw that "Moses sat to judge the people.....from the morning until the evening." He asked why he did this alone, and Moses answered : "because the people come unto me to inquire of God. When they have a matter they come unto me, and I do make them know the statutes of God, and His laws." That was exactly what God had commissioned Moses to do—and no one else. But Jethro, the heathen priest, says "this thing is too heavy for thee," and urges Moses to appoint other men in Israel to judge in all matters of lesser importance, and let Moses handle only the greater matters.

Jethro's advice was reasonable and sensible, from the standpoint of human wisdom. He seems to have offered it sincerely, and in kindly spirit. He put it on a high plane : only able men who feared God, "men of truth, hating covetousness," were to be chosen. There was only one flaw in his plan : it was not from God. It was the wisdom of man against God, and "hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?" (I. Cor. 1 :20).

The surprising thing is that Moses, whose every blessing for himself and his people had come from hearkening to the Lord and doing all that He had said, now "hearkened to the voice of his father-in-law, and did all that he had said."

There had been no intimation, before this, that God's plan was too much for Moses's strength. God's plans never are too much for our strength; for "as thy days, so shall thy strength be," as Moses himself later told Israel (Deut. 33 :25).

The record simply tells us that the worldly wise advice of Jethro was followed, but no further comment is made, and "Moses let his father-in-law depart; and he went his own way into his own land." Jethro apparently does not come into the life of Moses or Israel again.

The late Dr. C. I. Scofield entitles this chapter "Leaning on the Arm of Flesh," and calls attention to the impressive fact that it was, a year later, Moses complained to God, "I am not able to bear all this people alone, because it is too heavy for me." God "entirely ignored this worldly wise organization (of Jethro), substituting His own order." For God directed Moses to appoint 70 elders of Israel, and bring them with him before the tabernacle, "and I will come down and talk with thee there : and I will take of the Spirit which is upon thee, and I will put it upon them ; and they shall bear the burden of the people with thee, that thou bear it not thyself alone." (Num. 11 : 14-17).

Story of Naval Message.

A story of the war, when both the Germans and the British became very smart at decoding each other's wireless signals, was told in a wireless talk by Lieut.-Commander Kenworthy. The Harwich Force, under Commodore Tyrwhitt, was undertaking an operation in the North Sea on one occasion in misty weather, he said, and got on to the enemy Zeppelins were about. His ships were all scattered, and it was necessary to send a wireless signal to warn them. He therefore signalled to all ships to read the last verse of Hymn 224.

Efficient as was the German General Staff, they had neglected to provide themselves with a copy of Hymns Ancient and Modern, but all ships in the British navy carry hymn books, and on looking up the verse the captain read the following:

O happy band of pilgrims,
Look upward to the skies,
Where such a light affliction
Shall win so great a prize.

This was all that was required, and sure enough, one of the destroyers presently brought down a Zeppelin with one of her anti-aircraft guns.

TEXTILE AGAIN

BY R. J. DEACHMAN

We are frequently told that the slight increases in the British Preference resulting in a lowering of about two or three per cent. in the duty of textiles had ruined the textile industry.

So far as cottons are concerned the opposite is proved by the heavy report of raw cotton.

Imports raw cotton 1922, 95,-385,978 lbs.

Imports raw cotton, 1926, 135,-573,803 lbs.

A further proof is the value of the stocks of the textile companies before and after the "disaster."

| Name of | High | High |
|---|---|---|
| Company | 1921 | 1926 |
| Penman's | 104 | 185 |
| Wabasso Cottons | 52½ | 66 |
| Dom. Text. (Pref.) | 105 | 119 |
| Canadian Cottons | 85 | 124½ |
| Montreal Cottons | 87 | 103 |

So you see "the ruin" is not as bad as it is painted at election time. To have bought a stock while the country was prosperous at say 104 and find it worth 185 after five years of ruin under the Liberals would be helpful, would it not ?

INDUSTRY WITHOUT TARIFF

BY R. J. DEACHMAN

There is no duty on binder twine—there has been no duty since 1906. Is there any twine made in Canada ? Yes. Despite the increase in grain production in Canada we are actually importing less twine today than we did before the war. In two years 1913-1914, our total net imports (gross imports less exports) totalled 51,571,179 lbs. In the years 1925 and 1926 the net import was 51,308,273 lbs.

As the import of the fiscal year would cover the crop of the previous calendar year, we have the following comparisons. In 1912, 1913, our total production of grain (wheat and oats) was 1,250,000,000 bushels ; in 1925, the total was 1,522,000,000 bushels. So you will note that with a 20% increase in production there is no increase in the import of twine. Further I have not mentioned the increased production of barley and rye in this period. Throw it in for good measure—amounts to about 80,000,000 bushels.

Meantime the Brantford Cordage Company, one of the largest twine plants in Canada, reports as follows : "We have been running steadily ten hours a day—fifty-nine hours a week throughout the year. Despite the addition of the No. 3 mill from which we are now obtaining full production, we has again been found necessary to work overtime." There you have twine industry—under free trade in a protectionist country busy—and working overtime.

Auto to Speed 250 Miles Per Hour.

A speed of 200 to 250 miles an hour is declared to be expected from a giant motor car now being completed at Wolverhampton, England, with a view to beating the world record recently claimed by Thomas, the English racing driver, at Pendine, Wales.

The London Daily Mail, describing the car, says it will be the largest in the world, officially rated at 1,000 horsepower and so unwieldy that it will only travel at speed in a straight line. It will have two engines of 500 horsepower each, 12 cylinders, and it is estimated it will consume roughly a gallon of gasoline per mile. The designer is a Frenchman, Louis Coatalen, a noted racing motorist. Major Seagrave will attempt the record in the fall either at Pendine or Southport.

H. H. HORSEY, THE LIBERAL STANDARD BEARER

At a Liberal delegate meeting in the Parish House on Saturday morning, Mr. H. H. Horsey was the unanimous choice to contest the Federal riding of Prince Edward-Lennox in the coming election. At a well-attended mass meeting in the same building in the afternoon, the above announcement was greeted with prolonged applause, and a motion adopting the report of the delegates passed unanimously.

Dr. G. A. Platt ably presided over the mass meeting and seated with him on the platform were Senator A. C. Hardy, H. H. Horsey, Dr. McCulloch and Dr. McGillivray. The chairman expressed pleasure at the presence of Senator Hardy, adding that it was a compliment to the Liberals of this riding to have such a prominent man for the convention. Dr. Platt expressed the desire of the Liberals of live to see the present campaign start off with a bang, with aggressive workers in every polling and co-operation of all the Liberals and Progressives in the riding.

He then called on Dr. McCulloch, of Wellington, who acted as chairman at the convention of delegates, to submit the report of that body. Dr. McCulloch briefly stated that after discussing several names, the delegates were unanimous in their choice of H. H. Horsey to carry the Liberal standard and in their opinion he could redeem this county for the Liberal cause. The record of the King Government is certainly not the only issue in this campaign. The constitutional issue is of supreme importance, although the public cannot fail to believe in the policy of Mackenzie King, that has brought such concrete prosperity to Canada.

In conclusion, the Liberal candidate made a strong appeal for unity and co-operation of every Liberal thinking public of Prince Edward-Lennox.

Senator A. C. Hardy was left the explaining of the so-called customs scandal and a fuller discussion of the constitutional issue. This that gentleman did in a most lucid and convincing fashion. In commencing Mr. Hardy thought it would not be amiss to congratulate the Liberal electors of Prince Edward-Lennox on their choice of a candidate. Mr. Horsey, he claimed, would make an ideal member. He is one of those few men who have the faculty of not only getting the attention it deserves, and he was sure he could bespeak the election of the Liberal candidate by a large majority on September 14th.

Senator Hardy declared he was filled with a great deal of sympathy for the Progressive movement, and in his opinion the Liberal party owed a debt of gratitude to the Progressives. They have forced the Liberals to step along just a little faster than they would have stepped. In this regard he referred to the Rural Credits Bill, which he believed would not have been brought in had it not been for the Progressives. As far back as any of us can remember, continued the speaker, elections have been fought on the tariff largely. Now Mr. Meighen fails to preach high tariff. He talks adequate tariff. On this occasion, however, we are not confined to the tariff issue alone. There is the Robb budget, the Customs scandal and the Constitutional issue, before the public. The Conservatives to a man opposed the Robb budget. Practically all these higher prices on cars manufactoured in Canada went into the pockets of the manufacturers, previous to the tariff reduction of the Liberal budget. Mr. Hardy referred to the Rural Credits Act, the Grain Act and Soldiers' Land Revaluation Act. Had these not been killed by Mr. Meighen's dissolution tactics, the Liberal Government would have put through the greatest legislative programme ever put through in a country.

Speaking of the Customs' scandal the speaker declared that it goes without saying that this is the old decoy-duck that has possibly have increased under the Liberal regime, but no one will deny that prices have fallen since the Liberals attained office in 1922. The entire enquiry has been tabled and is available to all. A clean-up of political methods was certainly necessary, but it was coming about by the Liberals previous to Mr. Stevens' charges.

Mr. Stevens' open letter to Hon. Mackenzie King regarding poisoned liquor was also referred to by the speaker. Mr. Meighen thought, could be attributed to Mr. Stevens' state of health.

The constitutional issue the speaker claimed of paramount importance. Mr. King has been accused of an attack on Lord Byng. The old story that the King can do no wrong still holds good. The attack must be met by his advisers in this case, Mr. Arthur Meighen. He alone is responsible for advice given His Excellency. Mr. Meighen says however he was a Governor-General's name dragged into an election. It is well known history that Lord Elgin was stoned and rotten-egged in Montreal, while the parliament buildings were burned by a Tory mob. The Liberals in this case are by no means attacking Lord Byng, but Mr. Meighen, for the advice he tendered His Excellency. Mr. King's down, and inhabitants of Canada starving to death. The one and only great remedy to cure these ills was Mr. Meighen's high tariff. We don't hear this now. The arguments have all been disproved. Canada's era of prosperity has arrived and under the government of MacKenzie King. Building, railways, trade, exports, life insurance, bank deposits, immigration, all show strong tendency the right way. So great and concrete has been this prosperity that the Liberal minister has been able to reduce the taxes of the people more than any other finance minister ever attempted. These tax reductions have deleted from the revenue of the country some thirty millions of dollars. Big reductions have been made in the income tax. Some sales and excise taxes reduced, receipt tax abolished and return to penny postage are a few of the reductions that effect the average man or family. Notwithstanding the Conservative blue ruin campaign the King Government came inpower, stayed in power, and all the doleful prophesies of the Hon. Arthur Meighen have been refuted. We must however, be on our guard against this whispering campaign at present being circulated. It is most unjust and unfair and is intended largely for the benefit of the women electors.

Referring to the constitutional issue, Mr. Horsey was sure all were aware that the Liberal party was just as loyal to the crown and flag as any other political party. They are, above everything else, interested in the principles of the British constitution. It is an accepted fact, that in Canada, as in England, the King can do no wrong. The gentleman who gives advice to His Majesty's representative must take the full responsibility for that advice. The crown's refusal of the advice of his Prime Minister, when that minister had never suffered defeat in the House of Commons, is a constituted precedent that has not happened in England in over a century, in Canada in three quarters of a century. The Hon. Arthur Meighen who advised His Excellency that he could carry on, as Prime Minister, a short administry, not one appointed having taken the oath, to take charge of Parliament. Defeat followed in the course of three days. He then asks for one of those violent dissolutions, to have the doors of parliament slammed in his face in the faces of the representatives of Canada. Mr. Meighen's sole ambition appears to be to get power, to control the election machinery, whether constitutionally or otherwise apparently matters not. The record of the King Government is certainly not the only issue in this campaign. The constitutional issue is of supreme importance, although the public cannot fail to believe in the policy of Mackenzie King, that has brought such concrete prosperity to Canada.

The Liberals in this case are by no means attacking Lord Byng, but Mr. Meighen, for the advice he tendered His Excellency. Mr. King's action in refusing a dissolution was not because he was afraid of a vote of censure. He had been defeated on the floor of the house on a motion, but thought dissolution in the interest of good government. On Monday he asked for dissolution, which was refused and immediately resigned. Meighen was called, and although he knew he did not have support to carry on, consented to form a government. Two days later a motion was carried, stating that government was illegal and ceased to exist. This was the first defeat of a government on the floor of the house since Confederation. Mr. Meighen then asked for dissolution and his request was granted. That Liberal statesman, Hon. George Brown, when faced with exactly the same condition as Mr. Meighen, tendered his resignation, and Sir John A. Macdonald returned to power given dissolution. Mr. Meighen's advice to Lord Byng in this case was simply an attempt to hang on and retain election machinery. Yet he claims King tried to hang on to office. Canada must go to England for her constitutional precedents. There we find the King never refuses a prime minister dissolution on his advice, even to the extent of several elections a year. Mr. Hardy did not believe it became the Tory party very well to talk of purity with such men in the ranks as DeWitt Foster, W. B. Hanson and G. A. Jones. The speaker told of the Conservative majority in the Senate holding up legislation that had gone through the Commons as a leverage on the Progressives to turn the Liberal Government out.

In conclusion Senator Hardy appealed for the unity and aggressive support of Liberals for the election of H. H. Horsey.

The following resolution carried unanimously :

Moved by A. M. Platt, and seconded by J. L. Shannon, that we, the Liberals of Prince Edward-Lennox, assembled in convention, wish to express deep gratitude and sincere appreciation of the valiant fight being waged in the interests of Liberalism, in the interest democracy, and for the preservation of constitutional rights by our revered leader, Rt. Hon. Mackenzie King ; and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded by our secretary to Rt. Hon. Mackenzie King, assuring him of our unswerving loyalty, of our confidence in his leadership, and our honest hope and belief that after September 14 he will be called upon again to assume command of the great ship of state and guide the destinies of the Dominion of Canada.

The meeting closed with the National Anthem and cheers for the King and H. H. Horsey.

Britain's Big Lobster Catches.

Generally speaking, the biggest catches of lobsters in Britain are made along the East Coast. At the Norfolk fishing stations about 40,000 lobsters are landed during the season.

The biggest lobsters, however, are those taken on the Scottish coasts as far north as Lewis and Harris. Here the lobster fishing is dangerous work, for the seas are heavy and the weed-hung rock shelves most treacherous.

The biggest lobsters are those that are sometimes caught in trammel nets. Specimens of 8½ pounds have been taken, such a lobster being too big to enter an ordinary pot. They are pugnacious creatures, and each, it is caught, has its claws tied. Otherwise they would mutilate one another.

Long-Life Records.

Members of the vegetable kingdom easily beat those of the animal kingdom where length of life is concerned.

The life of the great fir trees may vary from 100 to 4,000 or 5,000 years. The cypress, it is said, may live for 550 years, the ivy 450, the chestnut 600, the cedar 800, the oak 1,000 to 1,500, the yew 2,500, and the baobab tree 5,000 years.

A hundred years are attained by some of the longest-lived animals, such as the elephant, the crocodile, and the tortoise. Pike and carp have been known to live from 60 to 150 years; eagles, crows, and parrots from 50 to 100 years.

Germany's Shrinkage Great.

Compared with conditions in 1914, prior to the war, Germany to-day has lost about 13 per cent. in territory and 10 per cent. in population on the basis of figures now accepted as reasonably accurate and final. This does not include loss of colonies. Figures compiled by the German authorities say this means a loss of 25 per cent. in coal, 75 per cent. in iron ore, 48 per cent. in brass, 16 per cent. in wheat and rye and 18 per cent. in potato production. Her merchant fleet is about 88 per cent. reduced.

New Ship for Hudson Bay Company.

The governor and committee of the Hudson Bay Company inspected at the company's new vessel, the Bayrupert, before her departure on the annual voyage to Hudson Bay.

In wishing the vessel a successful voyage, the governor, Mr. Charles V. Sale, emphasized the fact that on June 3, 1668, the company's first vessel, the Nonsuch, a ketch of 50 tons, sailed from the same waters on the voyage which, in originating the formation of "The Governor and Company of Adventurers of England Trading into Hudson Bay," at the same time laid the foundation of the great Dominion of Canada, the keystone of Empire, stretching from sea to sea.

Liquor Exporters Evade Tax.

E. L. Swartzlander, a special agent of the Internal Revenue Intelligence Service, testified in the United States Federal Court at Seattle that British Columbia liquor exporters doing business in Seattle have evaded payment of $1,000,000 in income taxes to the United States.

The information was elicited during a hearing to compel the Seattle National Bank to permit examination of its records of revenue men.

While you hold the line

A NEW and faster long distance service to many cities and towns, both near and far, is now ready for your use.

To take advantage of this new service, you should know the number of the telephone you wish to call in the distant city. Ask for "Long Distance" in the usual way and when she answers, give her the number of the distant telephone, as well as your own number and name. In the majority of cases, while you hold the line the operator will ring the telephone in the distant town and complete the connection then and there, or give you a definite report as to when it can be completed.

If you don't know the number of the telephone you wish to call, it may be necessary for you to hang up and wait for the operator to call you, as formerly.

This new and faster service is a distinct advance in long distance operation. It will prove an invaluable time-saver for all who use it.

MYSTERY ISLANDS.

An Island Which Disappears One Half of the Year.

The recent plight of the Argentine hunter who unwittingly set his tent on a moving island and was floated to a marshy tract during the night again illustrates the danger of these "nomadic" forests to the unwary.

Lake Orion, in the State of Michigan, owns, perhaps, the most mysterious as well as the most celebrated of these geographical enigmas. It has long perplexed scientists how this island appears floating on the surface during one period of the year and then disappears to rest at the bottom of the lake for the rest of the year.

It appears on the surface regularly at the middle of August, and remains an island till February 15th each year, when it is engulfed and sinks to the bottom. Many efforts have been made to probe the mystery, but every attempt to control its appearance and disappearance has ended in failure.

As the island is quite an unwanted one, attempts were made at one time to end its career by loading it with tons of stones. The island disappeared as usual at its proper time, but the 15th of the following August found it drying on the surface again.

Another island with a spirit for adventure is the floating island in Henry's Lake, situated in a depression of the Rocky Mountains, called Targee's Pass. The lake has an area of forty square miles, and this floating island keeps sailing around it at an average rate of about five miles a day. Adventurers who have landed on the island without knowledge of its roving propensity have awakened in the morning to find themselves marooned and their small boat floating miles away.

EUROPE'S QUAINTEST REPUBLIC

Has Two Overlords, France and the Bishop of Urgel In Spain.

Europe's least-known republic, Andorra, has received a surprise. Recently it notified the League of Nations direct of its adherence to the Opium Convention, but was reminded that it was not a sovereign State, and that it must act through France.

Andorra, buried in its lonely valley in the heart of the Pyrenees, is left so severely alone that this small oversight may be pardoned.

It does, as a matter of fact, claim complete independence, under a charter of Charlemagne, but that document is, alas, a forgery, and the tiny republic has really two overlords, France and the Bishop of Urgel in Spain, a fact duly recognized by its only taxes, 960 francs a year to France and 460 pesetas to the bishop, a total of, say, $100.

This joint rulership dates from the thirteenth century, and constitutes the Bishop of Urgel the only cleric in Europe still having temporal power.

A Clever Settlement.

Elihu Root tells of a case which in cleverness compares favorably with the famous judgment of Solomon and is on more than one occasion cited by Oriental cadis. A farmer in Mr. Root's native Clinton died, leaving seventeen live cattle and his widow among his three sons as follows: To the eldest son, one-half; to the second, one-third; to the third, one-ninth. The widow got 8 7-17, 5 2-3 and 1 8-9, respectively. The outlook for some of those turks was decidedly sanguinary; but before the axe was raised a local lawyer, Cornelius Husk, was asked to try his hand at the problem. He settled it neatly and without bloodshed. Driving one of his own turkeys into the yard with the seventeen, he called out the brothers and gave the eldest one and a half, which he did, taking nine; the second for his third took six, and the remaining brother for his ninth took two. Then each son reportedly got more than he expected, and the lawyer drove his own turkey home again.

Does Not Pay Postage.

Only one person, the King, is exempt from the payment of postage. Other members of the royal family affix stamps to their letters.

Door Key Lore.

Most of us, when we use a latchkey in entering a house, have never thought of the historical significance of the action. Yet the latchkey has a symbolism entirely its own. Examine the images of the Egyptian deities in the British Museum and you will notice in the hands of some of them a cross with a circular handle. It represents the Ankh, or key of life, one of the oldest of all religious symbols, denoting the power to open and close the doors to heaven. The Key had a magical meaning for the Greeks and Romans. Their gods were often given the title of Keybearer, as, for example, Janus, the god of gates, who was supposed to unlock the doors of war and peace. In early Christian history the symbol of the key was associated with St. Peter, with his two keys of gold and iron.

A Left-Legged People.

Trans-Canada Highway

Five years ago the prospect of having an all-Canadian highway from coast to coast looked a remote possibility, writes Dr. P. E. Doolittle, president of the Canadian Automobile Association. To-day it is almost an accomplished fact. From Halifax on the east to Sault Ste. Marie at the foot of Lake Superior, we have now a fine highway, with only a ferry across the St. Lawrence river at Quebec, and even that will soon be unnecessary, as we are assured the Quebec Bridge will soon be planked for motorists.

From Vancouver on the west the highway right through to Winnipeg lacks only one short section up the Fraser Canon from Hope to Merritt, and this, built this year at an expense of three million dollars, will be opened for traffic this year. There is every prospect that the Kenora and Lake of the Woods district will be opened up to Winnipeg this year, and the gap between Kenora and Sault Ste. Marie has already a number of sections built that need only linking up. The Trans-Canada Highway should be a great lure to Americans to come and visit our wonderful summerland.

Another highway that we are assured will be opened late this summer is that leading from North Bay to Cochrane, to the gold and silver and pulp districts of the north. This should have an immense attraction for the American tourist to see a newly-developed country with safety and he will be able to see the greatest gold mine in the world and the largest pulp and paper mills in the world, also an immense undeveloped mineral country that promises soon to be the greatest gold-producing district on earth. He will also see a district, not only in Northern Ontario but also in Nova Scotia, Cape Breton and Northern Quebec. In fact all across our Northern Canadian territory, where fishing streams are to be found with the gamest of fish in their cold waters and in the autumn moose, deer and bear abound, making it a sportsman's paradise as well.

The greater part of our great northern playground is beautifully wooded with abundance of streams and lakes, but the section from Winnipeg to the Rockies embraces a large area of prairie land that in many places is devoid of trees. To improve this condition we are arranging to have trees planted along the highways from coast to coast in Canada, whenever they will add to the attractiveness of the highway or the beauty of the scenery. This applies particularly to the prairie section, but also applies in stretches of the older parts of the country where the virgin forests were denuded by the early pioneer and there are many places where reforesting will be to great advantage.

The tourist on a holiday wants to feed on more than scenery. To fully satisfy his desires it is essential that comfortable hotels be provided for his entertainment wherever he goes. Canada has many high-class hotels in the larger cities across the continent, so that within a day's tour one can generally get one of these fine hostelries.

To the motorist Canada has many fine roads over which he can ride in perfect comfort and enjoy beautiful scenery, but the pleasures of a vacation in Canada are not held out to the motorist alone. There are also two great railways have from coast to coast luxurious trains and luxurious hotels where the de luxe tourist can have all the delights of a holiday with the best accommodation. They have many hotels specially erected for the accommodation of the tourists, not only in the Rocky Mountains, Rocky Mountain Park and Jasper Park but also in Northern Ontario and in Quebec.

If you are a motorist of moderate means, comfortable touring camps are situated along all the main travelled routes where you can live in comfort at a minimum of expense, and, seen from the seat of either a humble "bus" or the highest priced touring car that money can buy, the scenery, the fresh air and ozone of our mountains is the same, and it is equally free to all.

Too Many Churches In Exeter.

Churches in Exeter, Eng., are said to be more numerous in proportion to the town's population than any other town in the country, and twelve of these have come under review with a view to amalgamation or abolition. Some of these are sparsely attended, but all are of historic or architectural value. Three have been definitely threatened with destruction, namely, St. Mary Major; St. John, an eleventh century church with an embattled tower and turret; and Bedford Church, which is one of the few "upstairs" churches in existence. St. Stephen's Church, which is built over an arch, is also suggested for destruction.

None of Them Would Be Safe.

A judge, in delivering the charge to the jury, said: "Gentlemen, you have heard the evidence. The indictment says the prisoner was arrested for stealing pigs. The offence seems to be getting a common one.

"The time is coming when this must be put a stop to—otherwise, gentlemen, we shall none of us be safe."

THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA.

Instead of Being Black or Brown, the Mud Is All Colors of Rainbow

Instead of being black or brown, the mud at the bottom of the sea is all the colors of the rainbow.

Marine deposits in either deep or shallow water at a distance of from 100 to 200 miles from the coast of America and of Europe are whitish, being largely composed of minute shells reduced to powder and mingled with volcanic dust and tiny mineral fragments torn away from shore by the action of waves and currents. In Arctic and Antarctic waters continental rock fragments are mixed with the other deposits.

In greater depths far from land under the Northeast Pacific the ocean floor is carpeted with clay ranging from a brick red to a reddish chocolate. This clay is soft, plastic and greasy to the touch while wet, but when dried it cakes compactly, can only be broken by a hammer blow and should make good building material. When rubbed with any hard substance the fragments become glazed and shining like earthenware, though less brittle. In this red clay minute red worms almost invisible to the naked eye are found, but whether the worms are colored by the ooze they inhabit, or whether the ooze owes its ruddy hue to them, is a question undecided by marine scientists.

Another kind of mud is of a straw color that becomes cream white when dry, when it is soft and light as ashes and sticks to the fingers like fine flour. In tropical seas at considerable distances from land mud is found of a deep-rose color shading to milky white. Nearer land this mud is grey or bluish gray.

Blue mud is only found on the bottom of an arm of the sea. The blue color is caused by organic matter and sulphide of iron. The unpleasant odor of blue mud is due to sulphuretted hydrogen.

Green mud and sand are developed along bold and exposed coasts, such as the Atlantic coast of the Southern United States. The green-colored sand, which sparkles in the sun like pulverized emeralds, is usually found in shallower water than the green mud. Neither is discovered at less than 100 nor more than 90 fathoms.

Around islands of volcanic origin the mud varies from light gray to brown and black. Coral mud, red and white, is found, of course, near the coral reefs and islands. Along the Brazilian coast the ooze is identical with that in the Yellow Sea near the mouth of the Yangtse-Kiang, being red-brown in color and yielding the same deposits on analysis.

A United States warship taking soundings 800 miles from Cape Town brought up in brown ooze from a depth of 2,382 fathoms two long worms exactly like earthworms, except for the head. One was 26 inches long and the other 19, and both were lively. They were enabled to exist at such a depth by the fact that the sounding was made at 7.20 a.m. and it took until 11.08 p.m. to reel in the line—probably one of the deepest soundings ever made, except the famous deep hole near San Juan, Porto Rico, where no line has ever reached bottom.

CHAMPION STINGY MAN.

Beggs Wore a Derby Hat Which Had Turned Green With Age.

Here's a story about a stingy millionaire, which B. C. Forbes, writing for Forbes Magazine, says he picked up in Milwaukee:

The veteran, John I. Beggs, worth many millions, was so careful of his pennies that for years he wore a derby hat which had turned green and dilapidated with age. But no amount of coaxing or joshing by his friends could move him to buy a new hat. Finally they decided to play a prank. He was scheduled to make a talk at a little gathering, and while he was in his seat his old hat was slyly placed on his chair. When he sat down he crushed it hopelessly.

With the tenderness of a mother picking up an injured child, he lifted the hat and pathetically began to try to massage its wounds. He looked the picture of despair. Then, with some ceremony, they presented him with a costly new hat. This partly assuaged his sorrow.

Next morning he went to the store where the hat had been purchased, exchanged it for a cheaper one and pocketed the difference!

Tax collectors are now wrangling in court over taxes John I. dodged for years before his death.

Wily Whales.

Sir John Bland-Sutton, the famous surgeon, tells a striking story to demonstrate the cunning with which the "killer" whale chases its prey.

It feeds on seals, which it cannot easily drag off the ice, but it swims under the ice on which the seal lies, and using its powerful dorsal fin, suddenly rises, and breaks off a piece of the ice with it. If the seal tries to escape by sliding over the ice, the whale follows it, and continues its breaking tactics until the seal is captured.

The teeth of killer whales make those of the crocodile seem puny, but, curiously enough, these terrors of the seas, who even prey on their harmless relatives, hunt in packs, like wolves.

STEPPING IN SNAKE-SKIN.

Dainty Footwear Due to Grim Struggles With Death In the Desert.

Snake-skinshoes, the latest novelty in the footwear of the smart woman, are causing havoc among the snake population of Mexico, from which most of these skins come, says Answers.

A new industry has sprung up to supply the new demand and hundreds of peasants in the State of Coahuilla, have left their land to turn snake-hunters.

Snake-skin, with its shimmery scales, has the advantage of being tough and durable as well light. In the United States the women now are wearing nothing except the skins of reptiles, having abandoned leather altogether.

So great has been the demand that the snake-hunters of Mexico have not been able to cope with it. Therefore, as a new novelty, the Mexicans started to export the skins of the iguana, a large and beautifully marked lizard common to the State of Coahuilla. One recent order received by Juan Gonzales, in Mexico City, was for no less than a hundred thousand iguana-skins.

In fact, the whole of Mexico is out hunting reptiles to supply milady with dainty footwear. In the vast Mapimi desert the hunters, armed with sticks, search for rattlesnakes, whose sting means death to the unwary.

Along the river banks in the State of Guerrero, alligator hunters are depleting the rivers of those hideous reptiles. Their skins are shipped to America, some finding their way on to the London and Paris markets. One hundred and fifty alligator-skins were shipped this year to New York from Mexico.

But milady is fickle. No sooner is the snake-skin the rage that she must think about the fashions of to-morrow. After snake-skin, say the experts, milady is going to have shoes made from the skins of mountain cat, puma, and red lion!

Largest Inland Island.

Manitoulin, in the northern part of Lake Huron, is the largest fresh water island in the world. Its magnificent scenery and beautiful and extensive succession of ideal spots for the summer vacationist. The many bays and inlets that divide the island from the mainland are full of salmon trout, bass, pickerel, muskinonge, etc. Manitoulin is rich in Indian lore, as a Indian reserve is "being discovered" by ever increasing numbers each year.

Very Thoughtful.

Hilda (married a fortnight): "I do think it was kind of Mr. Dash to give us a wedding present. We scarcely know him."

Jack: "Oh, well, you see, I sent a wreath when his wife died. I suppose it was a case of 'I thought of him in his trouble, so he thought of me in mine'!"

HOW MANY WIVES HAS WHALE?

A Sea Census Now Starting May Help to Solve This Problem.

The great whale, like a few of the other big mammals, is threatened with extinction. It is hunted for its sperm oil, blubber, and bones—hunted out of existence, say some who know the sea. And now the British Government has determined to find out whether these fears are well founded.

At Grimsby a ship, the steamship Scoresby, is now being fitted out to take a whale census, says Answers, and when it returns from its long and lonely voyage it will have taken the initial step in this the queerest "counting job" ever attempted.

The Scoresby will sail for the whaling waters armed with tackle for shooting into every whale sighted a small identification disc attached to a dart. The small dart, imbedded in the whale's back, will cause it no discomfort. Many a whale has been caught with the barnacle-covered harpoon of some unsuccessful whaler sticking out of its flank.

Among the things the Government experts want to ascertain are these: How many wives has a whale? How long does he live? What is Mrs. Whale's average family? How far does the whale travel?

Each disc will bear the date and the position of the whale. Whalefishers are being advised of the scheme and are instructed to forward all discs to England, with information as to where the whale was caught. When all the discs come back much light will be thrown on the habits and life story of the whale. Along with the Scoresby will go the famous Discovery, now returning from the Polar seas.

That How He Felt.

Jimmy, not feeling very well, was advised by his mother to go and see the doctor.

"Now, my little man," said the doctor, "what is the matter with you?"

"It's like this, doctor," answered Jimmy. "You know how you feel when you don't know how you feel? Well, that's how I feel."

That Awful Kid.

"Why, dad, this is roast beef!" exclaimed Willie at dinner one evening, when a guest of honor was present.

"Of course," said his father, "what of that?"

"Why, you told mother this morning that you were going to bring an old mutton-head home for dinner this evening."

DOGS WITH TOP-HATS.

Historic Hounds Which Tradition Says Went Into the Ark.

Top-hats, trousers, and a Noah's Ark ancestry are the principal features of the latest feminine fancy in dogs.

Although Pekes and Poms still have a large following, and lovers of the Alsatian hound and the Saluki, with which the sheikhs of Arabia used to hunt the nimble gazelle, are steadily increasing in favor among the fair sex.

These graceful animals look very much like an English greyhound, but have long, silky coats. In addition, the Afghan has a quaint bunch of hair, known to fanciers as the "top-hat," standing upright on his head, and his legs are adorned with long, shaggy tresses from shoulder to paw, a peculiarity which has earned for him the description of "the dog in trousers." From a distance that is exactly what he looks like.

The Saluki and the Afghan are admitted to be the oldest breeds of dog known to mankind, and there is some difference of opinion as to which came into the world first. A well-known show judge believes, however, that the saluki is the father of the species.

Many years ago, when all the world was young, he says that old grandpa Saluki wandered with his master's caravan from Arabia into Persia, where his progeny became sturdy settlers and developed a bigger frame. Roaming further afield, the breed established itself in Afghanistan, and there, while remaining true to type, grew a stronger coat plus the "top-hat and trousers," which were evolved as an extra protection against the more severe climate.

Whether or not this account is historically accurate does not matter very much. The antiquity and noble lineage of both breeds have been generally accepted—tradition says that it was one or other of them that represented the canine race in the Ark—and have won for them jointly an unchallenged position as the aristocrats of the doggie world.

Aged Man Killed by Train.

Daniel McLean, of Collins Bay, eighty-two years of age, was instantly killed at the C.N.R. railway crossing at Collins Bay, when he was struck by an east bound freight train, about eleven o'clock Tuesday morning last. The victim of the accident is known to be hard of hearing, and although the engineer sounded his emergency whistle several times before he reached the crossing, according to eye-witnesses of the tragedy, apparently the aged man did not hear them. He was walking along the sidewalk from the south side of the track, and had just stepped onto the track when the train hit him. He was carried as far as the cattle guards on the far side of the track, and the train was brought to a quick stop, the engineer having applied he brakes before the man was actually hit.

Telephone Service.

Frequent users of the long distance telephone have noted a marked speeding up of the service within the past few days on connections to many distant points. The change is due to the introduction of a new method of handling the long distance telephone operators. The usual practice has been, when a subscriber asks for "long distance," to connect him with a special operator, who records on the ticket the details of the call, while he hangs up until connection is established. Under the new method, the long distance operator receiving the call is able, on practically all messages where the number wanted is given, to connect the subscriber with the telephone in the distant city without it being necessary for him to hang up his receiver. "All that is necessary," Manager Mr. Nolan remarked in explaining the new system to the Express today, "is that the calling subscriber should give the long distance operator the number of the distant telephone. Of course, if he does not know the number, we can look it up for him, but in that case it may be necessary for him to hang up, as heretofore, and wait until the connection is established." "This new type of service," Miss Nolan added, "is one of the most important advances in recent years in long distance telephone operating. Our subscribers who have been using the service recently are greatly impressed with its speed and effectiveness."

The Late Michael Corrigan.

One of the few remaining links with the past was severed on Wednesday, July 25th, when death claimed Michael Corrigan, one of the oldest residents of Tyendinaga. Deceased was born in Richmond Township, Dec. 10th, 1840, and came to Tyendinaga when a boy, where he has since resided. He was a faithful member of St. Charles Church, Read, and having received the rites of the church he loved, he passed peacefully away surrounded by the members of his family. Always a staunch Liberal, deceased was well-known in political circles, being a member of the County Council for many years. His life in public and private was replete with deeds that will count for much when the score of life is hung up on the day of final reckoning. The funeral, which was largely attended took place on Saturday morning to St. Charles Church, Read, where a solemn requiem mass was celebrated by Rev. Father McCarthy, after which the remains were interred in the family plot beside those of his three sons who predeceased him. The pall-bearers were Dennis Daugher, Jas. V. Walsh, John Hunt, Joseph Gardon, Joseph Williams and John Delanty. The many spiritual offerings testified to the esteem in which deceased was held. Besides a devoted wife he leaves to mourn his loss four sons and four daughters : Thos. J. and John, of Marysville ; Frank, of Belleville ; Dennis, of Frankford ; Mrs. P. Donovan, and Mrs. M. J. McLaughlin, of Belleville ; Mrs. Joseph Egan, of Read, and Mrs. Hugh J. Walsh, of Erinsville. He also leaves three brothers, John, William and Thomas, and two sisters, Mrs. Donoghue and Miss Annie, all of Tyendinaga.

The Late Thomas Killorin.

The death of the late Thomas Killorin, which took place at the home of his daughter, Mrs. A. J. O'Brien, in Toronto, on Monday, last, removed a pioneer of the Erinsville district. The death of his wife about five years ago broke up his home, and he took up residence with his daughter, Mrs. O'Brien, in Toronto, where he has since resided. Throughout his long and active life, deceased held the respect and esteem of all with whom he came in contact, and his passing has brought many evidences of sympathy from a large circle, both in Kingston and in the Erinsville district, as well as in Toronto. His remains were taken to Kingston and interment took place in St. Mary's cemetery, where deceased's wife is buried. The late Mr. Killorin is survived by three daughters, Mrs. J. P. # STORY OF MISSING HEIR

JUDGE TELLS STORY AS WARNING TO JUNIOR BENCHERS.

Large Amount Added to List of Unclaimed Estates Every Year Owing to Mysterious Disappearances —More Publicity Wanted.

An amazing amount of money is added to the list of unclaimed estates every year through mysterious disappearances, says an Old Country paper. Persons vanish as completely as if they had stepped over the edge of the world, and funds to which they are then or become later entitled remain dormant for decades, and in the end may be recovered by those to whom they belong, misapplied by rascally trustees, or completely forgotten.

To facilitate the distribution of such funds it is often necessary to apply to the court for leave to presume the death of a certain person. Usually this is granted, even in cases where the evidence is slight. A man who had a reversionary interest in £4,000 disappeared, leaving no definite trace beyond his overcoat, which was subsequently found on the side railings of Clifton Suspension Bridge. Nine years afterwards the death of the man was presumed as occurring on the date of his disappearance.

In similar circumstances the death of a baronet's son was presumed fifteen years after he had vanished. He left London by the Great Western for Kingstown, and nothing more was seen or heard of him. Next morning his bag and umbrella, as well as a book belonging to him, were found on a steamer, but his ticket was never given up.

Another man disappeared in Australia, and subsequently his two "wives"—one of whom he had "married" in Australia and the other in New Zealand—went to England, and claimed his estate. Neither, however, was successful. The death of the man was subsequently presumed, and his estate was divided between his two sisters.

But many applications to presume death are refused as "too previous." Madame Titiens, the famous singer and tragic actress, left her large fortune to a relative, Peter Tietjen, who had disappeared three years previously. He had then left Cardiff, where he had lived for some time, with the expressed intention of going to South America; but whether he did so could not be established.

Periodically the next relatives, with a view to obtaining the actress' wealth, applied for leave to presume Tietjen's death. Not till nearly twenty years later, however, was it directed that it, after proper advertising, the missing man or his heirs failed to appear, it should be assumed that he was dead.

A case of a similar kind is still pending. Twenty-four years ago a gentleman, who went to London on business, vanished, and a month afterwards an announcement of his death on a certain lady's death-bed—which was mentioned by name—appeared in several newspapers. On the face of things this was conclusive. But no yacht of the name given was registered.

Two years subsequent to the disappearance, moreover, the lady who was to have married the gentleman received by registered post an envelope, addressed in a strange hand, containing £500 in notes, with a visiting card bearing the words in her fiancé's handwriting, "Was true to you."

Several applications have been made to presume the death of the vanished gentleman—unsuccessfully, the court apparently holding the view that he is still in the land of the living.

Some judges are averse from presuming death too easily, because they have had experience of the contrary of this. One used to tell a strange story as a warning to younger members of the Bench.

In connection with a sum of money in Court, an application was made to him to presume the death of a man who had gone abroad some twenty or thirty years previously and had completely vanished. Not being quite satisfied with the evidence, the judge ordered the case to stand over, stating that if anything could be produced to corroborate the strong presumption that already existed, it would attend to it. Additional affidavits were accordingly filed, and ultimately the death of the missing man was presumed, and his lordship made an order for the division of the fund.

This order was taken to the proper office to be entered, and the clerk to whom it was handed was the very person whose death had been presumed before it was made! In his early days, being in some difficulty, he had fled the country. Then, after effacing himself for some years, he had returned under an assumed name.

A singular feature of this incident was that he had no previous knowledge of the money being in Court, and that if the order had been given to another clerk, instead of to him, he would have been deprived of his right to it.

In another case, which occurred only a few months ago, a man, who was legally presumed to be dead, announced from South Carolina that he was very much alive. The publicity given to the application had brought him to life again.

Sometimes, however, there is no haste in presuming death. Perhaps the most belated of all such applications was one made in 1909 in regard to a Chancery fund of £700, which was awaiting distribution among those entitled to it. The person whose death was then presumed had been born in 1753.

Still, any uncertainty with regard to the fate of missing people, where money is concerned, is very unsatisfactory, so it is desirable, as Lord Birkenhead said recently, that greater publicity should be given to inquiries for persons wanted to "hear of something to their advantage."

SECRETS OF HOLYROOD

Investigating Famous Mysteries of Scotland's Royal Palace.

A distinguished Scottish antiquarian, Mr. R. T. Skinner, is now engaged in cataloguing the royal tombs in Holyrood Abbey, Edinburgh, and the progress of his work is being followed with the closest interest by historians. It is expected that many interesting discoveries will be made.

According to tradition, Holyrood Abbey dates back to 11.28, but tradition, for once, has been too modest, says an Old Country paper. Excavation carried out just before the war showed that the choir of the Abbey had been built on the site of a former Christian church and churchyard, and that Holyrood was really some hundreds of years older than anyone had previously imagined.

The royal tombs with which Mr. Skinner is occupying himself are exceedingly interesting. They contain the remains of David II. and James II., of James IV., who was killed at Flodden, and of Darnley, the ill-fated consort of Mary Queen of Scots. At one time they had been allowed to fall into decay, but they were restored by command of Queen Victoria in 1898.

Rizzio's bones formerly rested within a few feet of those of Darnley, but they were removed from the royal vault some time ago, and Mr. Skinner believes that they are now buried in the nearby Canongate churchyard. Visitors to the Chapel Royal, which is all that is now left of the old Abbey, will, however, find other relics of the unfortunate Italian. The Gothic arch and oak doorway through which he was dragged to his death, the secret stairway by which they gained access to the queen's supper-room were uncovered recently.

The grave of the Countess of Argyle, who was one of the witnesses of the murder, is another point of interest. She was buried in a coffin largely composed of solid gold.

But there is no corner of the Chapel Royal where you will not find something that is associated with ghosts walk anywhere in Bonnie Scotland, surely they walk here.

Will Mr. Skinner, in his studies add anything to our knowledge of these "ghosts" — particularly of Mary Queen of Scots and her tragic history? So far Holyrood has kept its secrets, and the true story of this unhappy queen has still to be written.

Holyrood is, of course, one of the show-places of Scotland, though not all who visit the palace find their way to the Chapel Royal. Yet the royal tombs are just as interesting as the historical apartments, and those visitors who have a real love of the relics of the long ago take care that they see both.

The present Prime Minister was one of these discriminating people. An amusing story is told of his visit to Holyrood a short time ago. He was shown the spot where Rizzio's body was left after the murder, and remarked:

"In my young days I seem to have heard that this place was touched up here and again with a little red paint."

"Not now, sir," replied his guide. "The cry to-day is economy!"

But whether they may yet sometimes, the custodians of Holyrood love every stone of the old place. Indeed, they cannot help thinking that Holyrood is a place whose charms familiarity cannot pall. They grow upon you, the more you see of the palace of story.

This was shown twenty years ago, when the Earl of Leven and Melville, who had on several occasions been Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, and so knew Holyrood intimately, left £40,000 for the restoration of the Chapel Royal.

The restoration, however, was never carried out. Experts were consulted, and reported that it would be impossible to restore the ruin for use as a modern chapel without the ancient architecture almost completely disappearing in the process."

LOWERING THE LORDS.

During Last Century Over Hundred Peerages Became Extinct.

Now that it has been proposed to reform the House of Lords by, among other things, reducing very considerably the number now eligible to sit, it is interesting to note that if there had not been a constant creation of new peerages, the Upper House would by now have become quite a small body, numbering not more than 150.

During the last century no less than 124 peerages became extinct! And since 1900, mainly due to the deaths of only seven titles, in the Great War, the loss, actual and contingent, has been on a higher scale.

Then, too, many of those who were raised to the peerage on account of valuable services rendered to the nation left no heirs to take their place. There is now no Lord Rowton, no Lord Leighton, no Lord Brampton, no Lord Lister. A few names out of the "Spiritual peers"—the bishops—do not pass their dignities to their sons. But if that were the case, then "spiritual peers" would soon number but half a dozen or so. The majority of the bishops have no "heirs male," as the phrase goes.

A NOVELTY.

Sturdy Old English Carpenter Made Organ From Molasses Tins.

A sturdy old carpenter and wheelwright, Thomas Dixon, of Normandy, a lonely village on the moors between Scarborough and Whitby, England, has found a new use for empty tins. He has built a single-manual organ, on which he has been at work for twenty years, and its sweet notes emitted through pipes fashioned from old treacle tins, paper, wood, and the common pipe metal used by plumbers.

The organ has three stops—diapason, open diapason, and flute. The body is made of plain deal.

All the work has been done in Mr. Dixon's little workshop adjoining his cottage, which stands in a sheltered hollow of the moors. Pride of craftsmanship sustained him in his task. He worked with the materials readiest to his hands.

The Bishop of Woolwich, Dr. Hough, who was on holiday close to Whitby, chanced to meet Mr. Dixon and heard him play his home-made organ. He was so delighted that he offered to hold a service in his wheelwright's shop.

A few visitors and moor farm workers gathered in the workshop, with its undisturbed litter of wood and tools. The bishop presided. The congregation sat on rough benches and knelt in sawdust. They rose and sang hymns fervently, and at the organ sat the carpenter playing on the work of his own hands.

YOUTH FIGURES IN BUT ONE-THIRD OF AUTO ACCIDENTS

BY ERWIN GREER.

(President Greer College of Automotive and Electrical Trades, Chicago, Ill.

The newspapers are full of the accounts of the amazing recklessness of young drivers of motors before the bar of justice and taking their licenses away. The palpable reason of the frequency of these stories is that usually they are more startling than those dealing with the transgressions, traffically speaking, of the older generation. Experts say the fact, by actual number youths figure in less than one third of our accidents is that the young driver has a surer, firmer hand; that while he may take what appears to many as the most reckless chances, they are in reality not chances at all, but merely the result of confident reliance on a much firmer sense of judgment of distance, timing, etc.

The greenhorn as a rule is deathly afraid of taking chances; the old hand is seldom obsessed by any such fear—his very joy in automobiling comes in the element of risk. The driving habit dares not exceed the speed limit, he dares not pass anyone; he honks his horn at the least provocation; he slows up at road intersections, peers around from side to side, and in all other respects shows that he has due respect for the slogan "Safety First."

There are other fallacies brewing in the public brain with intention of the automobile accidents. One of these is that bad weather brings a flock of accidents with it. Unthinkable is it alone. The figures say otherwise. Thus:

As against 36,501 occuring on clear days, a total of 8636 are directly attributable to bad weather, which number is divided into 6046 on rainy days, 2171 on cloudy and only 419 on foggy days.

In 1925 there occured in New York State 17,128 accidents according to a report recently issued by the bureau of motor vehicles. Of this number 28,908 or about 60 per cent. are recorded as having taken place on straight, level roads. On "death curves" there were but comparatively small number of 1316 accidents, strangling popular supposition number one.

Drivers between the ages of 25 and 54 figured in a total of 37,007 accidents, 1025 deaths resulting. Drivers between the ages of 16 and 24 have 12,446 accidents chalked up against them, 401 fatalities appearing in the list following. Something like a 90 per cent. score for the young "driving fools."

So, if you, Mr. Motorist, are over twenty-five years of age—watch yourself, because statistics prove that you are to blame for only one-third of the country's automobile accidents.

CANADA'S AGRICULTURAL PLANT

It is curious to contemplate the lop-sided situation of the whole British Empire in respect to agriculture. The United Kingdom, Canada, New Zealand, South Africa and Australasia which comprise about one-quarter of the entire habitable area of the globe, only contain a total white agricultural population of about 14 millions, while European Germany alone can boast of a farming population of over 20 millions. There seems to be something basically wrong with an educational and social system which leads to such results. This complaint has been made by a profound student of world affairs that the British and colonial political economy has for many years been glaringly urban, almost to the exclusion of rural interests. That this is also the case in Canada is only too evident. One need but to digest the propaganda of our political parties at election time to be impressed with the total absence of constructive agricultural policies. The whole appeal revolves around urban problems.

WANTED—A SOUND POLICY

Proper allowances must, of course, be made for the fact that we are living in an industrial and commercial age, but it does not demand any great power of imagination to grasp the fact that, owing to the enormous agricultural resources of Canada, overwhelmingly greater than all others combined, the sound policy for us—and it may not necessarily be sound for other countries differently situated—is to build up a great consuming and producing population on our extensive, empire agricultural areas which will buy and sell in support of a dependent, proportionate urban population.

AN UNBALANCED ECONOMY

Largely as a result of Canada's vigorous urban policy, our town population during the past 30 years increased 200 per cent., while our rural population, in spite of our enormous area of vacant land, increased only 34 per cent. This cannot be regarded as a healthy development. Our gross agricultural plant last year was worth 2½ billion dollars with a production of 1,716 million. This represented solid, new wealth. These are imposing figures and should give cause for thinkmen to speculate on the possible performance of Canadian agriculture were we in the happy position we are more than a fringe of our agricultural area was on a producing basis.

THE FORCE OF PUBLIC OPINION

The whole of the United States has an arable area of 345 million acres. The three western provinces alone contain an arable area of 175 million acres, 37 million of which only are now under cultivation. We evidently have room, without crowding, for a population of, at least, 50 million people in Canada. We are, however, making deplorably slow progress in filling up this Inland Empire of our, and until the "man-on-the-street" in Canada arrives at an intelligent appreciation of the folly of avoidable delay in this nationally important task, there is little hope of improvement.

CONCRETE RAILWAYS COMING.

Is Becoming More and More Popular on British Railways.

We may see concrete trains in the near future for the use of this substance on the British railways is becoming more and more popular, says a writer in a London paper.

At one of the largest concrete yards in Britain, 22,000 concrete articles of varying sizes and types were produced last year for the Iron Way.

Well aerated slag chippings and slag dust are fed into a power driven mixer, and the mixture is emptied from the machine in skips, which transport it over a tramway to that part of the yard where wood, iron, or steel moulds are to be filled.

The articles are reinforced with steel mesh or steel bars, which are held in the centre of the moulds until the concrete hardens.

Amongst the types of articles for railway use made in concrete are fence posts, level crossing gates, telegraph poles, notice boards mile and gradient posts, and paving slabs.

Constant experiments are made by the railway chemists to discover the limitations and utility of concrete articles, and specimen posts are subjected to all sorts of weather conditions to test their durability.

Concrete floors for carriages have also been experimented with, so that concrete trains may come sooner than we expect.

"Biddy," said Pat, timidly, "did you ever think of marrying?"

"Sure, now," says Biddy, looking demurely at her shoe, "sure now the subject has never entered my mind at all."

"It's sorry I am," said Pat, and he turned away.

"One minute, Pat," said Biddy, softly, "you've set me thinking."

THE MASTER MIND

Novelized by Marvin Dana, Author of "Within the Law," From the Successful Play by Daniel D. Carter

Copyright, 1913, by the H. K. Fly Company

"I knew her a long time before you ever did. Pipe that, mister!"

"We'll not quibble over terms," Andrew said arrogantly. "It may seem odd to you, but I loved him. He was only a boy—a boy whose heart was broken—because he had loved one unworthy. He was the only thing that I cherished, the only creature life had given me to care for with all my affection, with all my soul. When he, for no fault, was condemned to die I—I—well, I—suffered!" Presently he continued, in a colorless voice of repression. "I swore then to make you suffer as he had—as I had. You presented to me a very difficult case," Andrew continued. "You were rich, honest, intelligent. You did not speculate. Your relations with women, even, were beyond reproach of the most scrupulous. For a time, I confess, I almost despaired of you—despaired of finding your weakness, your vulnerable point. Yet, not quite! You went abroad. It was a simple thing for me with my resources to gain access to your apartment. I went there, and made it my dwelling place until I had gained all that I needed. I searched your private papers. One day I noticed in your study a portrait—the face of a young girl. It was done rather crudely, perhaps, but it was done with sincerity and with a certain effectiveness. I found also some entries in an old journal which explained that face. Then I began to hope. We searched, you and I, for the same girl, and I found her. I found that the circumstances of this girl, who was the original of the portrait and of the entries in the journal, were ideal for my purposes. The essential thing is this: I desired you to marry her. In order to bring that to pass certainly it was necessary to prepare her, by education and experience of the world, to be your fitting mate. That was done. In fine, sir, you married her precisely as I had planned that you should."

"Yes," Wainwright agreed heavily. "I—I married her. I understand. Go on, please."

"And now," he went on, with a drawling contentment in his utterance, "you have just surprised her here in the act of leaving the house with her—well, let us say, with the young friend of her earlier days—Creegan."

The voice of Wainwright came roughly.

"What do you mean?"

Andrew's smile was taunting.

"It's clear enough, isn't it?" he jeered.

"You!" In a gust of rage Wainwright remembered the revolver offered to him by Marshall that same evening and accepted. His hand went swiftly to his hip pocket. There was no responsive contact with the weapon. As he stood astonished Andrew's voice sounded again with a vast entertainment derived from the circumstance.

"Your servant, Parker—my servant, Parker—is really very capable. You did not observe when he thoughtfully removed the weapon Mr. Marshall had provided." Then abruptly the mocking tones were filled with virulent hatred.

CHAPTER XV.

The Martyr.

"WE have here a close parallel, Mr. District Attorney," went on Andrew, "to the case of my brother. He killed his man under the influence of a sudden passion—justifiable passion too. Just now you would have killed me under the influence of passion—quite unjustifiable, however—had I not taken the precaution to have the weapon removed from you. But all this is beside the mark. The point of immediate interest is this: First loves are hard to forget, Mr. Wainwright. It is for this reason that Mrs. Wainwright, your wife, has planned to go away with our young friend Creegan."

"It is a lie!" Wainwright's voice was overweighted with quick rage.

"Since you doubt, why, call her!" He went to the door and swung it open. "Lucene!" he called. This use of her name so familiarly for the first time in the presence of the husband was in itself a revelation. "Come, Lucene," he cried; "come!"

The wife entered almost at once, for she had been waiting in the hall in an agony of despair.

It was the husband who addressed her with a fierce entreaty:

"Lucene, this man—he has been saying"— He choked.

Andrew continued:

"I have been trying to show your husband how useless it would be to attempt to prevent you from going out of his life as you had already planned. I have also"—

Wainwright was furious.

"He said—he said that you—you were going away with this man Creegan. Tell him he lies!"

"She will not do that," Andrew declared, "or I am much mistaken."

"Lucene!" The husband's voice rang forth in a loud tenderness.

She spoke in a level voice, apathetic from the burden of a consummate torment.

"There's no use of any more fuss, is there?" she said pitifully. "Oh, I'll go

"You wish to know about the money, perhaps?"

—I'll go! There'll be no scandal, none at all. I'll just go, and that will be an end of it."

Wainwright strode forward.

"No!" he shouted, with primitive violence. "I say no!"

"No, no!" she gasped. "You must let me go. It's the only way."

Andrew's voice came in gloating acquiescence:

"That is it, precisely."

Wainwright, however, was not to be intimidated by this mysterious conspiracy that meant the wrecking of his life's happiness.

"No! There are things you must tell me." His eyes pierced to the soul of his wife, so that she dropped her own and answered hurriedly:

"Very well. Only, please, hurry. What do you want to know?"

Andrew again interrupted, very blandly now:

"You wish to know about the money, perhaps?"

"About the money?" Wainwright repeated.

The wife hesitated.

"It was for Jim," she said feebly, for the soul of her revolted almost beyond endurance. "It was for him—Creegan. Oh, you've been good to me in your way, Cortland. But your way isn't my way, and—and now it's over."

Wainwright spoke with an inflection of half amused tolerance:

"You are making it very easy for me to let you go. Do you know that?"

The wife blanched.

"And why not?" she responded, with an effort toward brazen assurance. "Haven't you heard what Mr. Andrew said? And, now"— Her voice was tremulous, then broken with the burden of feeling. Yet she finished bravely, "And now I'm off."

Andrew added his word of corroboration, with a certain dreadful, mirthless jocoseness:

"Yes, the game's over!"

Wainwright was contemplating his wife with a strange intenseness. He approached her closely and spoke in a voice that seemed pliant to her control.

"I see!" he said slowly. "When do you wish to go?"

The answer came in a great gasp of despair:

"Now—at once!"

Of a sudden some delicate phase of expression in the beautiful face before him caught the attention of Wainwright, diverted it to a new understanding not complete yet, but enough for guidance in this time of crisis.

"I see," he said softly. "But, Lucene, you've overlooked one rather important thing."

His wife stared at him uncomprehendingly.

"Have I?" she questioned mechanically.

"Yes," Wainwright answered. "Of course, I dare say, it's a matter really of no moment to any one except myself. But the fact is you've made me love you."

DOCTOR ADVISED OPERATION FOR MRS. PENN

She Escaped It by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Windsor, Ont.—"After the birth of my first baby I was very much run down in health and the doctor said I must have an operation as I was suffering from a displacement. A friend wanted me to try your medicine—Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—and I took it steadily for a year. During this time I was carrying my second baby and I felt real well all the time and did not have a hard confinement. I feel sure the Vegetable Compound did me a lot of good, and all my people do, too. One sister in Leamington, Ontario, takes it, and both sisters praise it as a good medicine. I am more than pleased with the result."—Mrs. W. PENN, Windsor, Ontario.

Mrs. Corbin Relieved from Pain

Stewiacke, N. S.—"I had pains across my back and in my side for two years after my first baby was born. My mother had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I read about it in the papers, so I tried it and the pains all left me. I have a family of three children now, and the medicine helped me during the months before they were born. I recommend it to my friends."—Mrs. CARY W. CORBIN, Main Street, Stewiacke, Nova Scotia. C

There came from the girl a tiny burst of sound, indeterminate, yet fraught with emotion. The husband continued with a curious severity of expression:

"You had forgotten that?"

"The wife gasped. Her color flowed to and fro in her face, so that she was pallid and fevered in the same instant.

"No, no!" she breathed.

"But—hadn't you?" Wainwright persisted. "Hadn't you forgotten, too, how you—feel toward—me?"

Lucene shuddered visibly. But her resolve of martyrdom, formed under the specious arguments of Andrew, still held. She would not yield to the love light in her husband's eyes—the enveloping caress in his voice.

"No, no!" she cried, with a hysterical vehemence. "Don't you see? That was all a part of the game—my"—

Wainwright smiled inscrutably. Something in the manner of his wife was convincing toward comfort.

"Oh, yes, to be sure!" he said smoothly. "All a part of the game! And that—that is—all?"

Lucene faltered, shrank, could not meet his searching eyes.

"That," she said despairingly—"that is—all!"

Wainwright went slowly toward his wife. There was something compelling in his aspect, something that beat upon her heart and bent it to his will, despite her struggle against him. Blindly she saw an imperative gesture from Andrew, bidding her go. She gave no heed to it. Her whole soul was absorbed by the man she loved, who came close to her, and looked down on her with eyes that searched within the innermost recesses of her soul.

"Look at me!" he commanded. She made no answer; only stood downcast before him, tremulous, longing, fearfully reluctant. "Look at me!" Again the command smote her, moved her strangely to obedience, despite everything.

"Lucene!" Once again, his voice was wholly masterful. "Look at me!" Then, at last, she yielded her eyes to his, and the piteous sacrifice in those depths taught him something of the ghastly truth that lay beneath her surface reluctance.

He went to the door leading into the hall and called sharply:

"Marshall, Marshall!" There came an indeterminate sound that he translated into an answer. "Bring Creegan here!" was his command.

A moment later the detective appeared with a manacled thief at his side.

"Take off the handcuffs," Wainwright directed briskly.

After one glance at the set face Marshall obeyed the order. Then Wainwright spoke again, to the prisoner:

"Creegan, my wife tells me that she and you had planned to go away together."

"That's right, gov'nor."

Wainwright turned his eyes full on his wife, and spoke easily, almost lackadaisically:

"Well, here she is, Creegan. Take her—and go!"

The thief stared wonderingly.

"Sure—sure!" he exclaimed.

Wainwright nodded toward Creegan and then looked toward his wife.

"Come, come!" he exhorted. "There's your man. Take him and be off." He went to her, took her hand, drew her forward, and placed her hand in that of the thief, holding the two together. The touch of the ruffian's hand on hers broke the bonds of her self control. She drew away with a shrill cry of horror.

"No, no, no!" she repeated fiercely. "I can't, I can't, I can't!"

"Lucene!" Wainwright's voice was surcharged with tenderness.

But the woman was become genuine now—self sacrifice forgotten under the driving of natural repulsion.

"Oh," she cried despairingly. "I'll go; yes, I will go! But not with him—not with him! Oh, I couldn't; no, I couldn't! I'd—I'd kill myself first!"

Suddenly a smile curved the lips of Wainwright.

"I thought so!" Without any haste he turned to Marshall. "Take him away!" he directed, with a curt nod toward the thief.

"I'll keep him safe, no fear!" the detective joined.

But Wainwright shook his head.

"No, not that," he commanded. "Turn him loose—let him go!"

As the two disappeared Lucene uttered a broken cry and sank to the floor, huddling in helpless weakness. As she fell Wainwright leaped to her, caught her in his arms, drew her to his breast.

"Oh, my dear—my dear!" he said tremulously. "I knew it! Yes, I knew it!"

Then presently there came a whisper from the wife, a merest breath of sound, which told him loudly of her truth:

"Oh, Cortland, but I meant to go!"

For the time being Wainwright felt himself the conqueror. He understood in some measure the device by which the Master Mind had plotted to make Lucene the instrument of his vengeance. He turned to Andrew with a smile of exultation at the utter discomfiture, as he deemed it, of his ingenious foe.

"I shall dismiss you now, Andrew," he said, rather supercilliously.

The Master Mind, however, showed no trace of the humility of defeat.

"You are to learn, Mr. Wainwright, that I am not quite so easily dismissed."

Wainwright frowned disdainfully.

"What do you mean?" he demanded.

"What has passed," Andrew remarked, "is merely an incident. Now we come at last to the real issue between us."

Wainwright was plainly perplexed.

"The real issue?" he repeated.

Andrew's eyes flashed ominously and in his utterance had a new toxic quality.

"Do you suppose that, after four years of careful planning, I would place the issue in the hands of a mere child?"

"Yet it would seem that you did commit just that folly."

"Not so!" Andrew's denial was spoken with angry vehemence. "I have my chief resource against you still in readiness, and I shall employ it. Listen, sir! You aspire to high office, Mr. Wainwright. The opposition to you is strong, and it is unscrupulous. You have threatened the corporations. They know what to expect from you. Now, if in the newspapers were to appear the story of certain peculiar talents of your wife's relatives, together with a sketch of your wife's life"—

"My wife's relatives!" Wainwright exclaimed.

It was Lucene who seized the opportunity for explanation. Little by little, now that the period of most frightful stress was past, she had been gathering some idea of the truth as to the manner in which she had served the vindictive spirit of the man whom hitherto she had regarded with a reverential gratitude. Though the whole matter was not yet clear to her by any means, she nevertheless perceived beyond the shadow of doubt that Andrew hated her husband and that he had maneuvered elaborately for revenge, and that she had been entrapped by his wiles into the playing of a part against the man she loved. There was to her a wonderful comfort now in the fact that her husband had remained convinced of her faithfulness despite all appearance of evil. That he still loved her she knew, and the knowledge revived her spirit to revolt against the monstrous pretense induced by Andrew. She felt that now, at last, there was indeed an end to hypocrisies between her and her husband. The secrecy and deceit of the past had been punished enough already, perhaps, in the misery of the present. For the future there should be only truth between them. The love of the man, she had learned, was big enough to forgive the wrong she had done him out of girlish weakness, treacherously beguiled by the deft leadings of one whom she esteemed as her kindly guardian. So at Wainwright's bewildered exclamation, she cried out eagerly:

"Oh, let me be the one to tell you, Cortland. Please—please!" She clung to him in tender beseeching and felt a new strength from the fond glance of his eyes. "Yes," she went on, with a catch of her breath, "it's all true about me. I did wrong—oh, horribly wrong! I know now. My conscience told me the truth always, but I fought against it because he said I must. I let you think my name was Lucene Blount and that all these awful people were my relatives. Mr. Andrew said that it was the only way. I let him guide me. I honored him and loved him for all he had done for me, and I was sure that what he told me must be right, even when it seemed wrong to me." Of a sudden her face whitened, and the mouth drooped in fear. "Oh, I'm afraid I can't make you see, and, if I can't I shall die. You know, Cortland, I trusted him. Why, he has been like father and mother to me. And then he said he'd bring me the man I loved and explained that all this fraud about my life and relatives was the only way. He said, if you knew I was a poor girl with a bad record you never would care for me. And, because I longed so for you I let myself be persuaded and did everything as he bade me. I never dreamed that he was your enemy—never! Oh, Cortland, say that you see! Say it!"

"I shall dismiss you now, Andrew."

"Poor child!" Wainwright murmured. "Of course, dear, I see! But these persons—who are they, really, then?"

Andrew interrupted, with a gibing inflection in his question:

"Perhaps you still fancy that the Blounts are actually relatives of your wife?"

"Why should I not?" Wainwright retorted.

"Your reputed brother-in-law, Walter Blount," Andrew explained, with evident relish, "is William Slocum, alias Diamond White. Your reputed mother-in-law is Milwaukee Sadie, an exshoplifter. I may add incidentally that there are indictments out against her in Chicago in connection with the white slave traffic."

"It seems to me," Wainwright objected, "that you are talking nonsense. I myself have talked with persons who know the Blounts perfectly well."

"Those individuals were from Laramie." Andrew replied. "They have known the Blounts, so called, for the last four years in Laramie. During that period of time the Blounts have in fact lived respectably out there on the proceeds of their crimes."

Curiosity prompted Wainwright's next question:

"And my father-in-law?"

"He is Henry Morgan, alias Black Hank, a crackman wanted in three cities." Abruptly Andrew's face took on its most malignant aspect. "And now," he said, with savage emphasis, "your wife!"

Wainwright stiffened himself.

"Well?" he inquired quietly.

"Your wife, Mr. Wainwright," Andrew declared, with unconcealed exultation, "is Maggie Flint. That is her real name. She has been convicted of theft—served time. She was, however, a first offender and was soon freed by influence under a suspended sentence. You will find the facts duly set forth in the criminal records of Chicago."

Now, again, Lucene broke in on the conversation, Her musical voice was harsh, high pitched, from anxiety.

"But I was innocent!" she cried to her husband. And then to Andrew: "You know I was! Say it!"

"Yes," Andrew admitted without the least reluctance; "that is true. You were innocent."

Wainwright's professional caution compelled a question.

"How can you know that?"

Andrew smiled cruelly. He spoke in a tone of placid contentment.

"Why, as to that, it was necessary according to my purpose for her to have a record. I therefore arranged to give her one."

For a few moments Wainwright was filled with fury over this revelation of heartless cruelty against the woman he loved. He looked down again at Lucene and saw that she was staring at Andrew with distended eyes.

"You didn't know?" the husband questioned.

"No, no!" the wife panted. "Why, it is horrible! All that frightful misery—and he did it—and I—I loved him!"

Andrew's face grew tense under the denunciation, and his eyes fell for the first time. But he lifted them resolutely to meet Wainwright's as the latter spoke in crisp interrogation:

"Well, then, just what is your purpose?"

"You are a candidate for governor, but tomorrow will witness your formal retirement from public life forever!"

"You are mad!" Wainwright exclaimed contemptuously.

CHAPTER XVI.

The Last Menace.

"YOUR retirement from public life for all time," Andrew persisted, with sinister enjoyment in the reiteration. "Come, come, Mr. Wainwright!" he went on, with malignant mockery. "When this little story is published abroad do you suppose the people of this state will have you, a dupe, a laughing stock, for the governor? I think I'll leave you to meditate on the situation. Or, perhaps," he suggested, "you would prefer to hand me now your resignation as a candidate for governor?"

Wainwright was thinking rapidly.

"Must you have your answer now?" he demanded.

"I will receive it any time before daybreak," the Master Mind conceded. "Suppose we set the time at 5 o'clock this morning."

"That will suit me very well indeed," Wainwright agreed.

"That hour makes a particular appeal to me," Andrew went on smoothly. "It was something less than four years ago, at about the hour of 5 in the morning, that my brother whom I loved sat in a stone cell—waiting—waiting for the dawn, the coming of which should end his life. So, now, I leave you—waiting for the dawn—and me!—waiting for the end of something you hold dearer than life. I think—the end of your public career. Until 5 o'clock, Mr. Wainwright!" The Master Mind wheeled quickly and went out of the room.

Alone together husband and wife gazed long into each other's face. He bent and kissed the tender lips. When the caress was done she spoke pathetically:

"Oh, Cortland, darling, what have I done to you?"

"There, there, dearest!" he answered soothingly. "You are not to be blamed in any way, not even by yourself. You were caught in the meshes of a devil. You had no chance against the vindictive sagacity of the Master Mind. Go to the telephone in my study," Wainwright directed briskly, with the precision of one who has exactly determined his course, "and call up 114—party J."

He kissed her again hurriedly, but very fondly, and put her from him.

Marshall returned.

"Creegan's miles away now, by the rate he was going," Marshall replied.

Wainwright snapped. "Find Parker. You'll have to rout him out of bed, I suppose. Have him wake up the Blounts and herd them together for an interview with me right away. You keep an eye out for Andrew that he doesn't interfere." Lucene's voice came down the stairway in a summons to her husband, and he hurried to answer. At the telephone in the study, where his wife had left the receiver lying ready for his use, he put it to his ear, and called:

"Is this 114—party J? Yes? Dr. Forbes? You? Ah, doctor, listen! This is important."

* * * * * * * *

Wainwright hung up the receiver at last, and turned to his wife with a smile of satisfaction.

"Well, at least, that much has been arranged," he said. "Dr. Forbes has promised to come over here at once. Thank heaven, now we have a chance to win in this struggle."

"But I do not understand just what you mean to do," the wife exclaimed wonderingly. "You told him that Andrew had developed a strange mania, unmistakable symptoms of insanity; that you wished the man put under restraint for a period of observation. But you didn't tell the doctor the truth. And you will have to do that when he comes."

Wainwright shook his head.

"No," he said resolutely "I shall convince the doctor that the man is mad."
